It is here that Tinctoris made his famous claim that music had so vastly increased in scope since the 1430s that it seemed to have become a new art-an art that originated in England and was subsequently adopted by French composers. These developments are widely thought to have inaugurated the era of the Renaissance in music.

Johannes Tinctoris and the 'New Art'

JOHANNES TINCTORIS (c. 1435-1511) is widely acknowledged as one of the most important writers on music of the late Middle Ages and early Renaissance. His twelve Latin treatises demonstrate not only an exceptional technical command of the intellectually demanding musical notation and theory of the time, but also an intimate acquaintance with contemporary compositional practice, derived from a close knowledge of the composers of his day and their music, both in northern Europe, where he ...

THE STATE OF THE ART Rob C. Wegman A Renaissance in Music? In the early 1470s, Johannes Tinctoris, chief musician at the royal court of Naples, published a music treatise entitled *Proportionale musices*¹. Its contents are not of particular concern here—they are of interest mostly to specialists in fifteenth-century musical notation. But the Johannes Tinctoris and the 'New Art' A review of the passages in question indicates that Tinctoris's claims about the recent musical past were so thoroughly shaped by contemporary models of historical interpretation that it is difficult to disentangle hard facts from his historical vision as a whole.

Johannes Tinctoris and the 'New Art', Music and Letters ...

This brief passage, from Johannes Tinctoris's Liber de arte contrapuncti ("Book on the Art of Counterpoint," 1477) is remarkable in two respects. First, because Tinctoris identifies a break in musical tradition that had occurred about 40 years before—that is, at what we now think of as the beginning of the Renaissance era in music.
